

After the first Karabakh war, the theme of Karabakh in the epic poetry of Azerbaijan

Japanese writer Abe Kobo's famous novel "Woman on the Beach" in which "the horrors of the surrealist world, the deprivation of freedom and being condemned to a boring and destructive place, the sufferings of people in such conditions, and the spitting scenes are revived" is one of the most valuable works that attract the attention of readers due to the depth of its national color.

In the novel, "An entomologist goes to a remote village on the sand dunes for his scientific work. During his daily observations in the village, he sees that the residents scatter the sand balls created by the waves on the sea shore from early morning until late at night, clean the sand accumulated around the walls of the houses and sweep them away.

Finally, one day he couldn't bear it and asked: "Every day from sunrise to sunset, you are a mountain of sand, your whole life is spent like this, don't you get bored?" The villagers answer: - If we don't disperse the sand, the village will completely sink and disappear. The entomologist-scientist who came to study beach insects asks again: "Why don't you migrate to another place?" Villagers just one word: "Motherland!" they say.

In the 90s of the 20th century and the first decades of the 21st century, the theme of "Motherland" in Azerbaijani literature is precisely the theme of "Motherland" - the unjust war that the terrorist Republic of Armenia dragged our people to occupy Karabakh since 1988 (more precisely, starting from 1905-1918), our history is covered in blood. written page - the atrocities, martyrdom, disappearances, displacement, refugee pains, genocides committed by Armenian executioners, pains of the lost homelands, the dark fate of our captured countrymen, the trampling of the honor of our daughters-in-law, the pain of defeat, the shame of the dead, and above as emphasized, it has become the subject of many works, including an epic poem, and several novels, stories, poems and poems have been written...
